

“Alliance for Germany” Press Conference in Front of the Federal Government’s Guest House in West Berlin (February 5, 1990)

Abstract

The three conservative parties of the German Democratic Republic – Democratic Awakening (DA), the German Social Union (DSU), and the CDU (East) – came together in the “Alliance for Germany” and campaigned jointly for the East German Volkskammer elections on March 18, 1990. The “Alliance” advocated reunification, the social market economy, and the immediate introduction of the Deutschmark.
