

Consequences of the Anti-Socialist Laws—Police Break up a Peaceful Assembly in Berlin (1890)

Abstract

Even in 1890, before Bismarck's Anti-Socialist Law expired at midnight on September 30, police regularly shut down socialist rallies, even peaceful gatherings like the one shown here. Police were obliged to send an observer to every legally held meeting. It was not difficult for that observer, if so inclined, to interpret various anti-monarchist statements or explanations of Marxist doctrines as "likely to incite class hatred," which led in turn to the outcome depicted below.

Source

Source: Consequences of the Anti-Socialist Laws—Police Break up a Peaceful Assembly in Berlin (1890).

Wood engraving (1890) by F. Willig.

bpk-Bildagentur, image number 30013117. For rights inquiries, please contact Art Resource at requests@artres.com (North America) or bpk-Bildagentur at kontakt@bpk-bildagentur.de (for all other countries).

© bpk

Recommended Citation: Consequences of the Anti-Socialist Laws—Police Break up a Peaceful Assembly in Berlin (1890), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <<https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/forging-an-empire-bismarckian-germany-1866-1890/ghdi:imag>

e-1458> [May 03, 2024].