

Christian Ludwig Bokelmann, The People's Bank Shortly Before the Crash (1877)

Abstract

This painting by Christian Ludwig Bokelmann (1844–1894) captures the scene on May 9, 1873, outside the People's Bank [Volksbank] in Vienna, where burghers holding savings accounts gathered together after hearing rumors that a bank crash was imminent. With the dawning realization of the likely loss of their savings, these figures betray a range of emotions from concern to despair. The sense of impending distress and upheaval is underscored by the overturned basket (foreground, left) that once held dirt, rubbish, and ashes. Bokelmann's painting was exhibited at the Paris World Exhibition of 1878, where it was considered one of the most original German paintings on display.

Source

Source: Christian Ludwig Bokelmann, Volksbank kurz vor dem Krach [The People's Bank Shortly Before the Crash]. Oil on canvas (1877). Original: Milwaukee Museum of Art. Available online at: <https://collection.mam.org/details.php?id=16919>

Recommended Citation: Christian Ludwig Bokelmann, The People's Bank Shortly Before the Crash (1877), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <<https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/forging-an-empire-bismarckian-germany-1866-1890/ghdi:image-1370>> [October 14, 2024].