

Wilhelm Leibl, The Village Politicians (Peasants in Conversation) (1877)

Abstract

---

Wilhelm Leibl (1844–1900) originally planned to title this painting Latest News. As he wrote to his mother, “My painting shows five peasants who have huddled together in a small rustic room, apparently to discuss some matter of village politics because one of them holds in his hand a piece of paper that looks like an old land-registry notice. They are real peasants, whom I paint as true to nature as I can; the room is real too, because I paint the picture while I am in it.” (Götz Czymmek and Christian Lenz, eds., Wilhelm Leibl zum 150. Geburtstag. Heidelberg: Edition Braus, 1994, p. 67.) Leibl later titled his work Peasants in Conversation [Bauern im Gespräch], but it is best known under the name given to it by the contemporary art trade: The Village Politicians [Die Dorfpolitiker]. It was painted while Leibl was living in Unterschondorf am Ammersee in rural Bavaria. This painting contributed to a re-evaluation of Leibl among right-wing art critics of the 1870s. He went from a quasi-oppositional painter of “common” subjects (à la Gustave Courbet) to a “Holbein-like” chronicler of Germany’s rural essence.

Source

---

Source: Wilhelm Leibl, Die Dorfpolitiker (Bauern im Gespräch) [The Village Politicians (Peasants in Conversation)], oil paint on wood (1877). Original: Kunst Museum Winterthur | Reinhart am Stadtgarten, Winterthur, Switzerland. Available online at: <https://kmw.zetcom.net/de/collection/item/16996/>
Reproduction: World History Archive / Alamy Stock Photo. Image ID: EC8644.

World History Archive / Alamy Stock Photo

---

Recommended Citation: Wilhelm Leibl, The Village Politicians (Peasants in Conversation) (1877), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <<https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/forging-an-empire-bismarckian-germany-1866-1890/ghdi:image-1314>> [May 07, 2024].