

Display Window with Busts of Hitler: Souvenirs from the “Reich Party Congress of Freedom” (Fall 1935)

Abstract

The most successful Nazi propaganda tool was the “cult of the Führer” that operated around Hitler. Within the NSDAP, Hitler had already been treated with near religious veneration since the early 1930s. After he rose to power, the whole population was supposed to be involved in a kind of collective Hitler worship. Magazine articles, films, posters, postcards, and paintings represented Hitler as a multifaceted genius and a man of the people wrapped up in one. The message was that Hitler had recognized Germany’s problems and would eliminate them with a steady hand. He was not concerned with fame or power, it was said, but rather only with the nation’s welfare. In everyday life, the cult of the Führer was supported through a multitude of gestures and rituals such as the “Hitler salute.” A large segment of the German population remained loyal to Hitler almost up to the war’s end. This loyalty persisted despite the fact that the populace had begun turning away from the party in growing numbers.

Source

Source: Shop window with busts of Hitler. Souvenirs from the “Reich Party Congress of Freedom” in Nuremberg, 1935. Photo: Lala Aufsberg.
bpk-Bildagentur, image number 30013977. For rights inquiries, please contact Art Resource at requests@artres.com (North America) or bpk-Bildagentur at kontakt@bpk-bildagentur.de (for all other countries).

Recommended Citation: Display Window with Busts of Hitler: Souvenirs from the “Reich Party Congress of Freedom” (Fall 1935), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <<https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/nazi-germany-1933-1945/ghdi:image-1902>> [May 20, 2024].