

Dresden in the Aftermath of Allied Bombing (February 13-14, 1945)

Abstract

Until early 1945, Dresden was the only major German city largely spared by Allied air attacks. At the time of the attack, it was no longer of any great military or strategic importance; rather, it served chiefly as a reception point for Silesian refugees.

Source

Source: After the Allied air raids of February 13-14, 1945 – recovered bodies are burned on rail grates at the Altmarkt. Photo: Walter Hahn.

bpk-Bildagentur, image number 30003986. For rights inquiries, please contact Art Resource at requests@artres.com (North America) or bpk-Bildagentur at kontakt@bpk-bildagentur.de (for all other countries).

© bpk / Walter Hahn

Recommended Citation: Dresden in the Aftermath of Allied Bombing (February 13-14, 1945), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <<https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/nazi-germany-1933-1945/ghdi:image-2109>> [May 18, 2024].