

Shoemaker's Apprenticeship Program for Members of the Jewish Community in Berlin (1935)

Abstract

The expropriation of the Jews and their exclusion from particular professions had a dire impact on the economic situation of the Jewish population. Jewish communities and organizations answered by offering a variety of self-help initiatives for their members and by trying to integrate Jews into new economic niches. German Jews also pursued occupational retraining in agriculture and the handicrafts to meet the demands of the foreign job market and the immigration restrictions imposed by destination countries. In doing so, they hoped to better their chances for emigration. This 1935 photograph shows members of Berlin's Jewish community participating in a shoemaker's apprenticeship program.

Source

Source: Shoemaking course for members of the Jewish Community of Berlin. Photo: Abraham Pisarek. bpk-Bildagentur, image number 30022514. For rights inquiries, please contact Art Resource at requests@artres.com (North America) or bpk-Bildagentur at kontakt@bpk-bildagentur.de (for all other countries)

© bpk /Abraham Pisarek

Recommended Citation: Shoemaker's Apprenticeship Program for Members of the Jewish Community in Berlin (1935), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/nazi-germany-1933-1945/ghdi:image-1946> [May 10, 2024].