

POWs from Soviet Camps Arrive at the Friedland Transfer Camp (October 1, 1955)

Abstract

The release of the last remaining POWs and civilian internees from Soviet prisons revived the hopes of many Germans that their missing relatives were still alive. In the photograph below, people at the Friedland transit camp hold up signs with the names of loved ones and the last place they were heard from – e.g. Minsk or Stalingrad – in the hope that the released prisoners arriving at the camp would be able to provide information on their fate. Even after the last prisoners returned home, more than 1.1 million German soldiers and 30,000 civilian deportees to the Soviet Union were still missing.

Source

Source: Unknown photographer.

bpk-Bildagentur, image number 30017985. For rights inquiries, please contact Art Resource at requests@artres.com (North America) or bpk-Bildagentur at kontakt@bpk-bildagentur.de (for all other countries).

© bpk

Recommended Citation: POWs from Soviet Camps Arrive at the Friedland Transfer Camp (October 1, 1955), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/occupation-and-the-emergence-of-two-states-1945-1961/ghdi:i> mage-2599> [May 17, 2024].