

Protocol on the Accession of the Federal Republic of Germany to the North Atlantic Treaty (Paris, October 23, 1954)

Abstract

At the end of August 1954, the French National Assembly failed to ratify the European Defense Community Treaty. But this only represented a brief setback for the project of integrating a West German defense contribution into European structures, since the French voted instead for the formation of a Western European Union (WEU) with an arms control system that included the Federal Republic. They also opened the door for West Germany to join the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). On October 23, 1954, the following protocol was signed in Paris. For the Federal Republic, the Bonn-Paris Conventions meant an end to the occupation regime and the acquisition of expanded sovereignty vis-à-vis the Germany Treaty of May 1952. Within the framework of its accession to the WEU and NATO, the government of the Federal Republic accepted restrictions on rearmament, including the renunciation of nuclear, biological, and chemical weapons.
