

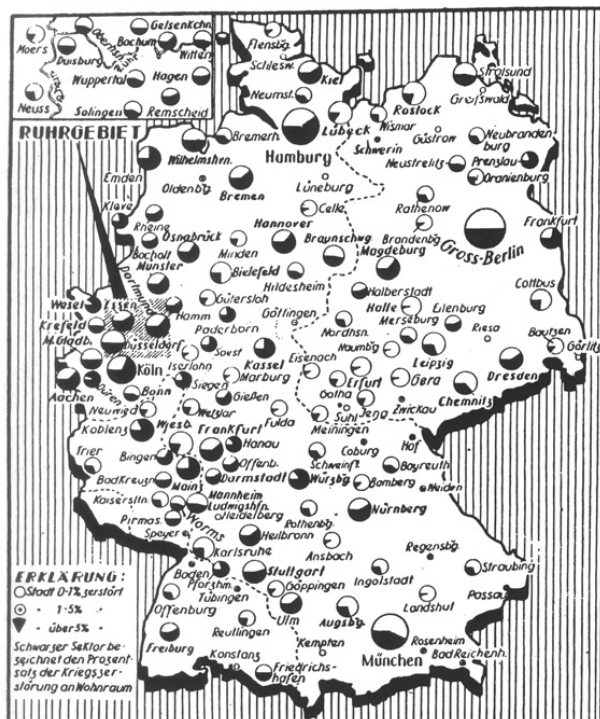

Graphic Map of Wartime Destruction in German Cities (1947)

Abstract

At the end of the war, a great many German cities were in ruins from Allied bombing raids and ground fighting. The destruction and housing loss were especially severe in West Germany's industrial centers along the Rhine, Ruhr, and Main rivers, as well as in nearly all major cities. The destruction was less extensive in southern Germany, Saxony, and Thuringia. Please note that this map was not based on a complete, uniform survey, and that the comparative data required qualification. Nonetheless, the map still makes clear the challenges of reconstruction.

The black segment reflects the percentage of housing destroyed during the war.

Source

Source: G.W. Harmssen, Reparationen, Sozialprodukt, Lebensstandard, Appendix VII. Bremen, 1947, p. 37; reprinted in Christoph Kleßmann, Die doppelte Staatsgründung. Deutsche Geschichte 1945–1955. Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht, 1986, p. 354.

Recommended Citation: Graphic Map of Wartime Destruction in German Cities (1947), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/occupation-and-the-emergence-of-two-states-1945-1961/ghdi:document-4459> [May 18, 2024].