

“U.S.A. Architecture” in West Berlin (1952)

Abstract

The ideologically-grounded criticisms leveled by the GDR leadership against Western culture also encompassed the field of architecture. In the eyes of East German functionaries, the architecture of West German office buildings and businesses, above all, replicated the American model, and thus stood as an architectural manifestation of all the evils of the capitalist system. This photograph shows the building of the Berlin Disconto-Bank. In 1949, after the Western Allies allowed the founding of new banks in Berlin's Western sectors, this bank was set up as the successor to Deutsche Bank. The official caption by the GDR news agency ADN for this image reads: “West Berlin U.S.A. architecture. The Disconto Bank Palace on the corner of Potsdamer and Bülow Streets is among those concrete blocks that have transplanted profit-seeking and American cultural barbarism into the landscape of West Berlin.”

Source

Source: Bundesarchiv Bild 183-14492-0004, photographer unknown

© Bundesarchiv

Recommended Citation: “U.S.A. Architecture” in West Berlin (1952), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/occupation-and-the-emergence-of-two-states-1945-1961/ghdi:image-2967> [May 16, 2024].