

Air Pollution in Brunsbüttel (1985)

Abstract

---

Although more stringent environmental regulations had been passed and public awareness of the dangers of air pollution had increased since the 1970s as a result of the environmental movement, damage to flora and fauna often continued because managers and unionists argued that jobs were the top priority. This photograph shows dead birds that had fallen from trees surrounding a chemical factory in Brunsbüttel, an industrial port city in Schleswig-Holstein.

Source

---

Source: Dead birds falling from the trees around the Brunsbüttel chemical factory, autumn 1985. Photo: Günter Zint.

bpk-Bildagentur, image number 30008410. For rights inquiries, please contact Art Resource at requests@artres.com (North America) or bpk-Bildagentur at kontakt@bpk-bildagentur.de (for all other countries).

© bpk / Günter Zint

Recommended Citation: Air Pollution in Brunsbüttel (1985), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/two-germanies-1961-1989/ghdi:image-90> [April 29, 2024].