

Chancellor Helmut Schmidt Visits the White House (1977)

Abstract

In 1977, West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt visited U.S. President Jimmy Carter at the White House in Washington, DC. The main topic of the contentious meeting was the policy of détente between West and East. Integral to Jimmy Carter's foreign policy were campaigns for human rights, including human rights violations in Eastern Europe. But Chancellor Schmidt wanted assurances that the focus on human rights would not jeopardize détente efforts in Central Europe. Both sides agreed on an initiative to reduce conventional forces in Central Europe (Mutual and Balanced Force Reductions or MBFR) with their NATO partners.

Source

Source: U.S. President Jimmy Carter and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt walk along the White House terrace outside the Oval Office. Date: July 13, 1977. Place: Washington DC. White House Photographers. National Archives and Records Administration. <https://catalog.archives.gov/id/175453>

wikimedia commons

Recommended Citation: Chancellor Helmut Schmidt Visits the White House (1977), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/two-germanies-1961-1989/ghdi:image-5066> [May 02, 2024].