

Ludwig Erhard with Cigar, Official Portrait (1963)

Abstract

As a skillful minister of economics (1949–1963), Ludwig Erhard had enjoyed extreme popularity. As chancellor, however, he was less fortunate and often showed weaknesses in leadership, since he lacked a power base within the CDU. Still, under Erhard, the CDU/CSU achieved a better result in the 1965 Bundestag elections than it had in 1961. Within the party, however, Erhard was criticized by chairman Konrad Adenauer and pressed by parliamentary group leader Rainer Barzel, who perceived him as a rival. When crisis conditions arose in the face of a looming recession, Erhard remained true to his liberal economic policies and rejected state intervention. Finally, in the fall of 1966, the debate over a 4 billion DM funding gap in the 1967 budget led to the breakup of the conservative-liberal coalition and the downfall of Erhard. Photo by Gerhard Heisler.

Source

Source: Ludwig Erhard, Federal Minister of Economics (1949–1963), Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany (1963–1966). Photo: Gerhard Heisler. Date: September 5, 1963. German Information Center. This photograph can also be found in the Image Archive of the Bundesarchiv (Signature B 145 Bild-00011704).

Courtesy of the German Information Center

Recommended Citation: Ludwig Erhard with Cigar, Official Portrait (1963), published in: German

History in Documents and Images,

<<https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/two-germanies-1961-1989/ghdi:image-2361>> [May 02, 2024].