

Two Portraits and a Bust of Walter Ulbricht (1964)

Abstract

In the mid-1960s, Walter Ulbricht was at the height of his power in the GDR. In the following years, however, his grasp on power loosened due to an ambitious economic reform policy and policies toward the Soviet Union that were controversial within SED ranks. After his forced resignation from the position of First Secretary of the Central Committee of the SED in 1971 and his death in 1973, Ulbricht was systematically wiped from the public consciousness by his successor, Erich Honecker. This photo shows two portraits and a bust of Ulbricht being made in Schloss Niederschönhausen. Photo by Jochen Moll.
