

Training Course for Women (1962)

Abstract

Legal equality between men and women was enshrined in the GDR constitution of 1949. The constitution explicitly repealed laws and regulations that stood in the way of women's emancipation, and it also decreed that women had a right to equal pay for equal work. In the GDR, the economic emancipation of women was supposed to form the very basis of social equality. Therefore, the government supported and promoted women's employment, which was not the case in the Federal Republic. While the GDR's stance reflected an ideology of equality, it was also informed by an acute labor shortage that presented certain economic imperatives. In 1962, women represented 44% of the total labor force in the GDR; in the Federal Republic, they accounted for 33.5%. The photograph features participants in a women's apprenticeship program at repair shop of the East German State Railways in Schöneweide (East Berlin). They are shown at a drill station.

Source

Source: Participants in a women's training course at the East German State Railways in Schöneweide, December 4, 1962. Photo: Hildegard Dreyer.

bpk-Bildagentur, image number 30020863. For rights inquiries, please contact Art Resource at requests@artres.com (North America) or bpk-Bildagentur at kontakt@bpk-bildagentur.de (for all other countries).

© bpk / Hildegard Dreyer

Recommended Citation: Training Course for Women (1962), published in: German History in Documents and Images, <https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/two-germanies-1961-1989/ghdi:image-2431> [April 24, 2024].