

German Army Postal Service: Loading the Mail Bags (Juni 1915)

Abstract

Between 1914 and 1918, roughly 11 billion letters from the front were delivered by the German Army Postal Service free of charge. Some 17.7 billion letters were sent in the opposite direction. The enormous amount of mail posed a management challenge to military authorities. At the same time, it also served as a virtually inexhaustible source of information on the general public mood. As of April 29, 1916, stations were set up at all army command offices to monitor war correspondence and draft reports on popular morale. In addition to the transmission of classified military information, all "inflammatory and disheartening announcements" were prohibited. This photo taken in June 1915 shows soldiers unloading bags of mail in Noyon, France.

Source

Source: Kamerad im Westen. Ein Bericht in 221 Bildern, Frankfurt, 1930, p.98. http://digital.slub-dresden.de/id1765335698/101

Recommended Citation: German Army Postal Service: Loading the Mail Bags (Juni 1915), published in: German History in Documents and Images, https://germanhistorydocs.org/en/wilhelmine-germany-and-the-first-world-war-1890-1918/ghdi:image-2153 [September 26, 2025].